

George B. Butler

To the Officers and Members of The Society of Polymer Science, Japan:

It is indeed a pleasure and an honor to be given this privilege to convey my warmest greetings and heartiest congratulations to the officers and members of The Society of Polymer Science, Japan on the occasion of the celebration of the Society's 30th anniversary. In thirty short years, you have demonstrated to the scientific world that polymer science is important to Japan and that your contributions to the science are among the greatest in the world. In both research and technology, you have excelled. The continual flow of new discoveries and technological developments from the members of your Society has favorably impressed your international colleagues, and has gained the respect of all. Again, my heartiest congratulations on this occasion!

George B. Butler
University of Florida

Paul J. Flory

The remarkable growth of Polymer Science in Japan during the past thirty years is abundantly evident. The Society of Polymer Science, Japan, has played an integral role in the promotion and encouragement of teaching, research, and development in this important area. It is a privilege and pleasure to convey congratulations to this Society and its 8,000 members on the 30th anniversary of its founding.

Paul J. Flory
Stanford University

Victor Kabanov

My dear Japanese Colleagues,

It is my great pleasure and honor to greet you on the occasion of 30th anniversary of SPSJ. I know that your outstanding contribution in the World Polymer Science was very much promoted by the SPSJ activity. So I wish your Polymer Society many happy returns of the day and still more success in the future.

V. Kabanov
Moscow State University